Analytik appoints new Service Support and Sales Specialist, Adam Hilless

Cambridge, UK, 6th September, 2016: Analytik, leading suppliers of innovative analytical instrumentation, welcomes their new Service Support and Sales Specialist.

Adam Hilless has been appointed as the new Service Support and Sales Specialist in order to further support the growth of Analytik. Adam joins us from the World Class MRC Laboratory of Molecular Biology (Cambridge) and brings with him excellent scientific, research, problem solving, and planning skills. His background also includes forensic science, paternity testing and agricultural genotyping, adding to the diversity of experience and expertise within the Analytik

Team. Adam is passionate about innovative development and continual improvement. He has a 1st Class Honours Degree in Human Biology from University of Loughborough. Speaking about his new job, Adam says "I am absolutely delighted to have joined Analytik. I look forward to using my background in biological sciences to help Analytik enhance its service support, expand its portfolio of products and continue the company's growth. Exciting times ahead!"

Customer Services Development Manager, James Anderson, comments on the new appointment "Adam has immediately had a positive effect on the company bringing great enthusiasm and willingness to get stuck in to almost every aspect of the business. As his training progresses and he finds himself in more customer-facing scenarios I'm confident he will become an increasingly valuable member of the Analytik team."

Analytik's Managing Director, Ian Laidlaw, continues "Adam will fit very well into the Analytik Team and company philosophy. This important and strategic appointment will help Analytik to achieve and support its ambitious growth plans. Customers will experience a greater diversity of product offerings, as well as improved support and strength in depth of pre- and post-sales support from Analytik."

The Analytik Ltd team wishes Adam every success in his role with the company!
